The NGU MABS program is offered over a 12-month period, with a new cohort beginning in August, January or May of each year.

The asynchronous delivery of online-based lecture and lab course material provides students in this program an avenue to continue to work full-time, while strengthening their foundational knowledge and skills for future careers in medicine. Course content is delivered online and asynchronous, including labs but there are weekly deadlines thus this is not a self-paced biomedical graduate program.

This degree program has been strategically developed to allow students to obtain the majority of the most common prerequisite courses for graduate medical education programs, including PA, MD/DO and DDS programs.
